The next mention of a library in Franklin in any record still available to us appears in 1811 when a committee of seven incorporated a social library. A book of this group's records indicates that the Franklin books would continue to be available under the old rules; one needed, however, to pay dues to borrow all additional books. In 1812 "A catalogue of those Books in Franklin Library, which belong to the Town" was printed and is the first printed list we have.
